...and finally, the person-centered approach, which also emphasizes the importance of individuals in their own lives. It is a client-centered approach that focuses on the individual's strengths and capacity to engage in meaningful relationships, while honoring the individual's preferences, choices, and abilities. This approach recognizes the unique nature of each individual, respects, and understands their experience and perspectives.

The Person-Centered Approach (NPCP) in Practice

Person-Centered Planning (PCP) is a framework for assessing the individual's needs and interests, and developing a plan of support that is based on the individual's preferences and desires. This planning model builds upon the individual's strengths and capacity to engage in community activities, while honoring the individual's preferences, choices, and abilities. This approach recognizes the unique nature of each individual, respects, and understands their experience and perspectives.

One more step: from person-centered to eco-centered therapy

Studying the person-centered approach and the solution-focused model, I have come to the conclusion that treating a person as anything less than the expert of his/her own life seems insulting and disrespectful. Both the person-centered and solution-focused models focus on the individual as the expert of their own life.

An Islamic Modification of the Person-Centered Counseling Counseling model of client-centered counseling, in which the counselor's role is to create an atmosphere where the client can express themselves freely. The counselor's role is to provide a safe, supportive environment where the client can explore their thoughts and feelings without judgment. Unlike traditional counseling models, the person-centered counseling model places emphasis on the importance of the individual as the expert of their own life.
