Power-sharing in Deeply Divided Places

Power-sharing in Deeply Divided Places examines the system of consociation, which was developed in part by the Dutch to deal with the complex political challenges of the Netherlands. The system of consociation has been used in a number of places, including Western Europe, South Africa, and the Former Yugoslavia. The book examines the strengths and weaknesses of the system, and the challenges it faces in today's world.

The book is divided into three parts. The first part examines the historical development of consociation, and the ways in which it has been used in different contexts. The second part examines the implementation of consociation in different places, and the challenges it faces. The third part examines the future of consociation, and how it can be adapted to different contexts.

The book is a valuable resource for students of international relations, comparative politics, and international law. It is also a useful resource for policymakers and practitioners who are involved in the implementation of consociation in different contexts.

The book is available in both hardcover and digital formats. It is a must-read for anyone interested in the study of consociation and its role in resolving the complex political challenges of the modern world.
