American Literature and the Catholic Faith – The
No summary, however brief, of American literature and the Catholic Faith could omit to mention T. S. Eliot (1888-1965), albeit only a passing and cursory mention in this case; nor could it fail to mention the giant, Ernest Hemingway (1899-1961), a troubled convert whose works are nonetheless "Christ-haunted," or the giantess, Flannery O'Connor (1925-1964), who coined the phrase "Christ-haunted" to describe the American ...
